Pending Ordinance Rule and Not a Moratorium

On July 23, 2019, the City approved the Planning Commission's recommendation to adopt a "Pending Ordinance Rule". This action was taken as a follow-up to a Planning Commission meeting where the Ombudsman for the State of Utah, Brent Bateman, gave a detailed presentation on the difference between a moratorium and a pending ordinance rule. The city does not have a moratorium on construction. It has adopted a rule that gives the planning commission discretionary authority to consider all projects that are presented and to determine how said projects align with zoning ordinance changes under consideration by the Planning Commission and compare with a General Plan (2020-30) that is being prepared.

The planning commission is not arbitrary or capricious in deliberating on all projects analyzed while the Pending Ordinance Rule is in place for six months. Indeed, four projects have been approved since the Pending Ordinance Rule was adopted.
